Relationship Management: Working with Others Addendum

By: Hannah K. Epley

Scenarios

- Disagree on the theme for camp.
- Disagree on decorations for the fair booth.
- Person 1-asks lots of questions (more than necessary); person 2-doesn't consider alternatives or potential challenges, just ready to make a decision and move on.
- Someone blatantly makes someone feel bad about their outfit.
- You enter a room where everyone else is chatting and having fun and they don't acknowledge you at all.
- You have divided up responsibilities to plan your activity at camp… one person has their duties in order by the next planning meeting. The other person doesn't.
- A pair of counselors are engaging with one another… but no other campers or counselors.
- One counselor always wants to be the one to lead songs and be the center of attention. One counselor would like to do this… but hasn’t said anything to the others.
- You have divided up responsibilities to plan for your fundraiser. One person has their duties in order by the next planning meeting. The other person doesn't.
- One club member always wants to be the person to lead the pledges, speak in front of the group, and in general be the center of attention. Another member would like to do this, but has not said anything to the others.
