Emotional Intelligence Lessons

Self Management: Being Aware of Feelings

DEFINITION
Self Management: (also known as self-regulation) the ability to manage one's actions, thoughts, and feelings in flexible ways to get the desired results.

BACKGROUND
It is important to be aware of the emotions we experience, recognize when we feel a certain way, and also be able to manage these emotions and take responsibility for them. Refer to the emotional intelligence overview for additional background information.

WHAT TO DO
Activity:
- As a large group, read a scenario from the addendum. Have a discussion asking:
  - How did you feel when this happened?
  - Why did you feel that way?
  - How do you know you felt that way?
  - How would you like to feel?
  - What could you do to manage these feelings?
- Continue sharing a few other scenarios and discussing them until the group seems to handle it.
- Distribute paper or other material and writing instruments.
- Tell the group that they will be recording their reactions to the scenarios on their own. They may do this by drawing a feeling face (smiling, frowning, anger, etc.) or just writing a word to describe it.
- Have the participants hold up their reactions so you can visibly see them.
- Share the remaining scenarios one at a time.
- Point out when individuals have different reactions.

Intended Audience:

TALK IT OVER
Reflect:
• How did you respond?
• Why did you respond that way?
• Was it the same response as others? (Point out that everyone responds differently.)
• How can you change the reaction or manage your feelings? Examples may include:
  o Breathe
  o Count to 10
  o Smile
  o Take a sip of water
  o Reframe your thought process: how is this situation positive?
  o Take time to stop and think
• What are strategies you plan to use to be aware of your emotions?

Apply:
• Keep an emotion diary of how you feel to monitor your responses to situations.
• Think through your previous emotions things in the future when responding to situations.
