Self Management: Reactions Matter Addendum
By: Hannah K. Epley

A child does not do as well as hoped in their class/project area and begins yelling at anyone around them, blaming the judge for their final product and placement.

A camper is paired with another camper for a game, and the two of them do NOT get along. They bicker during the entire game, making it miserable for others around them.

A co-counselor is taking credit for another counselor’s efforts when planning an activity. The counselor who is not receiving credit yells at the co-counselor for taking something that is not theirs.

A parent contacts a volunteer about enrolling their child in a project, a week after the project deadline was due to the Extension office. The volunteer yells at the parent, telling them that they need to pay attention to the rules.

A parent yells at the volunteer who coordinated a recognition event for the Junior Leadership club, because the parent did not feel their child received enough recognition for all the work they did.

At the end of camp, a parent confronts the camp counselor about not paying attention to their child during the week and the camp counselor immediately begins crying.

A volunteer is working the informational booth in the 4-H project display barn during the fair. A fairgoer approaches the volunteer and tells them that the booths are in terrible shape and that 4-H has gone downhill in the past 25 years. The volunteer becomes very hurt and starts telling any and every other volunteer / parent associated with 4-H about the rude fairgoer.

On social media, a teen 4-H member makes a comment about how terrible the 4-H meeting was, and that it was a waste of time to be there.

A 4-H parent sends a volunteer a strongly worded email questioning why meetings are led by youth and not adults, and states that it is a waste of time for the youth to be in charge, since adults do all the work in the first place.

At camp, it is thundering and lightning outside. A counselor is terrified of the storms and refuses to participate in the activities, even though the adult staff members have requested them to do so.